Market Outlook

Indian markets continue to show resilience as they touched new lifetime high levels during the month of May. Focus likely remained on medium term vaccination outlook, in-line earnings season and lifting of activity constraints. Along with declining cases, assurances from global central banks on liquidity and firmer global equity markets also helped broader investor sentiment.

FILs have turned consistent net buyers and ended the month at a modest $37mn of net buying in May. In April, FILs, net sold $1.5bn in equities, breaking the 6mth inflows streak that started in October last year. Q1 saw $7.3bn of inflows.

Estimates for US and global economic growth are being upgraded while Central banks are reiterating their accommodative stance even in the face of rising inflation which is seen to be transient. Strong growth, loose policy, and excess liquidity are boosting global equity markets to all-time highs.

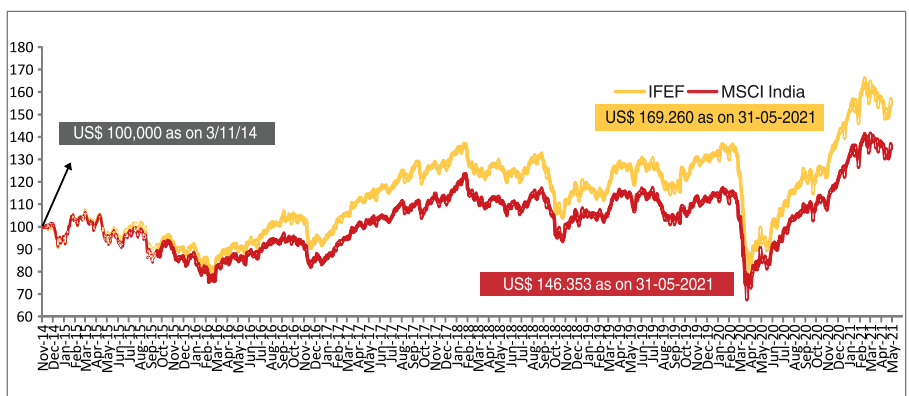

In India, we are seeing some demand destruction due to the second Covid wave and India's economic recovery could be delayed by six months. Hence, we could see earnings downgrades and returns could be muted in the near term. However, the Covid wave has peaked out and we are seeing a decline in new cases. At the same time, vaccination supply should improve in the next few months and India should attain herd immunity by the end of this year. So, India's economic recovery should come back on track in the medium term and our outlook remains positive.

Valuations seem stretched from a near-term perspective. But investors should bear in mind that we are in an environment wherein earnings are not normalized, liquidity is very high, and interest rates are low. So, valuations can sustain above their long term averages. From a medium-term perspective, valuations seem fair as the economy and earnings would normalize by then. Hence it is advisable that investors take a med-to-long term view in the current environment and don't get swayed by current optically-high valuations.

In the med-to-long term, maintain our view to play domestic cyclicals, industrials, financials, and pharma as economy should normalize in FY23. Risk-reward for Equities still looks relatively attractive as compared to other asset classes.
